

METHOD FOR SELF-STARTING A COMPUTER

Abstract

According to the claimed invention, a computer is disclosed. The computer comprises a first memory for storing a BIOS, a clock for tracking time, a second memory for storing the time value of the clock and an alarm setting based upon a predetermined time selected by a user, a communication management circuit for controlling peripheral memory buses, and a power supply for providing electrical power to the computer.